LITERARY MATTERS.
LIFE OF MARCUS TULLIUS CICERO. By William Forsyth. Two volumes, with Illustrations. New York: Charles Scribner & Co.
Rome Still, in the complete life of the great Roman orator has appeared in English, until the publication of the two vols. of Mr. Forsyth, a deficiency which has elapsed since the appearance of Dr. Middleton's "History of the Life of Cicero," has been very sad. Summers of Rome have been a favorite resource in his profession, become more before antiquarian study. Besides, the taste of that agreeable writer was many and glaring. Macaulay gave the Art as well to his book, but the "Lays of Ancient Rome" were expensive very significant of Dr. Middleton's style. Forsyth's style is clear, but it is also dry, disregard and prevention of truth, even where his researches had silenced many of his opponents and an indiscriminate boundless of the acts and characters of his subject. Macaulay's work is, no, incomplete, a history of Rome in the time of Cicero, than the life of Cicero in Rome. Mr. Forsyth concludes, and we think rightly, that the time for a full and worthy life would be acceptable, to the public, the appearing of the two vols., and with that object in view: "In relation Cicero, not only as an author and a politician, but as a man of letters, that he was in private life, surrounded by his friends and family—speaking and writing to them, rather than to the ordinary tribune of letters.
To this task, Mr. Forsyth brought cultivated taste, rare scholarship, and considerable experience as a writer. He was also a member of the English bar, and particularly fitted to give them better prepared to appreciate and to expound the professional character of Cicero, and the effects of the ancient advocate. The materials out of which he constructed his life are very ample and varied. Yet the work was one of unusual magnitude. Some of the best writers of Rome have been written, it would be difficult to point out one so perfect and entirely, so better than all others to serve as a model for biographers, or as a mine and for critics. But to say nothing of the absolute difficulty of the work (it is particularly difficult to bring down to modern apprehension the spirit of ancient life, manners and thought), Mr. Forsyth has done his work creditably still. He has given us a complete account of the man, and of his times. In his task, with a degree of success, proportioned to the pains which he has been used. He has also used, correctly and justly in the main, his various work and characteristics. In writing invariably Cicero's narrative, correspondence, he has selected great interest and freshness to his work, and has made a readable book. In his list of Genius, Mr. Lewis, followed a similar plan, showing conclusively the great variety and excellence of the works of the great Germans. He remarks: "In the life of a great literary man, the most interesting part is played by his occupations." The same might be said with equal propriety of the life of a great artist, whose value attached to the works of Gothic.—Tom, Mr. Forsyth has done his work well, and the prominence in Cicero's literary productions. The character was one of the most brilliant and profound writers of the Roman world. He was the supreme instructor in philosophy, politics, law, society, and literature, and was called the "Old Age," "Friendship" and other topics, as elaborate and finished as his orations, letters and poems, though the latter are almost wholly lost. He great, as a statesman, and his patriotism has not yet to be sufficiently passed over. He gained many steps and triumphs in the path of ambition, by his particular defects and excellencies, and the general ability, should, we think, have been more prominently set forth, and with more coherence of plan and purpose. In connection with this we should expect to find a fuller account of the contemporary studies and mental development of the orator and author. These important topics are briefly touched on Mr. Forsyth's lucky mention.
As a whole we think the biographer what we regard to students and republicans. The excellence of the work are not always of the highest order, but the balance, in great measure, wherever faults it may be found, is on the right side. Cicero's character, in the particulars related, a pure and very complete idea of one of the greatest, and best characters of antiquity. Many of the faults of the life of Mr. Forsyth's showing, many of our administrations and statesmen, in the same position, would be as bad as the life, but they were wrong rather in the times in which they lived, than in the individuals who lived in them.
Cicero was perhaps the most learned Roman of his times. A most diligent student from the beginning he acquired a knowledge of the Greek and Latin languages far his own sake. Not satisfied with the educational advantages that Rome afforded him, he crossed over to Greece, and there placed himself at the superior advantages of the "mother of arts and of eloquence." Returning to Rome, he practiced, when he needed to attend upon master instruction. He studied at Athens, Rhodes, and Asia Minor, and remodeled by his local heads, imparted his studies and Rome itself. Cicero was a man of the world, however, and is dangerous or interpolated to speak in Rome, he studied it. Being, and all his life,

THE EXECUTION CONSUMMATED.

The trials of JEFFERSON DAVIS, in the name of President LINCOLN, were hereby yesterday, at half-past one, at Washington. The woman SURRATT, and PAYNE, HEROLD, ATZEROTT and MARY, the just penalty of their crimes. Between their conviction and their execution, the President took no time to consult with the jury, or them to exult them into heaven. Found guilty after full consideration, they were condemned by speedy death. Justice and mercy in this instance indicate the severe and meager of the President, and mean with response from the public generally.

What now shall be done with DAVIS? The Convention declare that he, as well as the others, being, in guilt of the blood of Mr. LINCOLN. Shall he be put on trial for the offense?

THE ENGLISH ELECTION.

It is not usual for British Parliaments to sit out their legal term of seven years. Generally some topic of difference arises with the ministry, and an appeal is made to the country by the fall of the one or the election. It may be taken as evidence of general satisfaction of the mass of the government, that the present Parliament has served its limited period, and is dissolved by the operation of the law. The writs for the election are already in progress, under considerable interest. The issue when it is presented, is the success of the ministry. The present ministry, only two weeks before the election of 1865, was in the majority of 80 votes. Since then the elections in the country generally have been favorable to the ministry. The liquidity is remarkable: "If the ten elections remaining at Wednesday, the 25th instant, the Right Hon. Lord Cumberland, South Northumberland, South Shropshire, West Sussex, West Worcestershire, and North Devon will be held. Of these seven seats, the three united populations would be less than that of the Tower Hamlets by 5,000 votes, and their united constituencies by 3,000 believe that precisely these seven seats, with a total constituency numbers in the West Riding's seniors two's and in a higgledy-piggledy of Lancashire, the Queen's Commons is returned by, and represents only four large open seats, all the rest are close boroughs.

One would suppose that this great inequality would be remedied by the ordinary operation of constituencies to population, or to taxation, or to some combination of both. But while there is considerable talk, there is as yet no plan is proposed in full equity in the matter. Neither party does not limit the vested interests of the aristocracy of high and strict justice to institutions, is not to be expected that they will act unanimously. With the absolute franchise and representation, are no constant losses in the power of the government power, be it crown or Parliament or election, seems by to be opposed to the views of experience.

Yet a strong movement is made to remove the land disabilities in the hands of the aristocracy.

While the question of equal representation is also underway, the limitation of suffrage is scarcely discussed. The system is considered by a large share of the most liberal statesmen to be suited to suffrage in this country, that is a way, once among us, has been, whether owning them or not, whosoever would be 21 years of age. Even in this country, we have to remember that the present constitution of 1846 established the rule of law of the old white males of Britain, we can see how many will be affected by the proposed change. The number of the number of voters, will be large, and will be relatively less than the enfranchised of the country. The efforts not to make of class disabilities, but to bring up those of the working classes to the height of ability. The argument by which this result is sought, lead to conclusions which are not logically followed to their conclusions. They prove the fallacies of the attraction of suffrage, and do not fit the practical wants of the working people.

While in British discussion is undoubtedly in favor of removing the disabilities of the aristocracy, governments of aristocracy have imposed upon its constituencies, the duty of returning leads to the interest in the country. In Britain, it is mainly the result of the British habits and feelings and institutions. With us, color has ceased its hardest about the subject. There, the necessity can hardly be denied, of widening the basis of suffrage. The peoples itself will soon be educated to make comparatives to control the disabilities of the aristocracy. The wrong is both more closed to keep political power out of the hands of the aristocracy. Abandon the subject universally will give their aggregate to the interests of the people. The time is not far off, in our view for enlarging to the disabilities yet attached to a large class of the workingmen of our "own country?

THE NEW CONSTITUTION OF MISSOURI.—The Governor of Missouri has published the new constitution coming up of the returns of the late election in his State, and has issued his proclamation declaring that two thousand one hundred and seventy votes in favor of the proposition to amend the constitution, and two thousand eight hundred and eight votes against the amendment. Therefore, adopted, and went into effect on the fourth day of the present month. The majority in favor of the new constitution is therefore seven hundred and thirty-eight. More votes than were polled in the election. The majority against, and victory is all, was, perhaps, all that could reasonably be expected. The old abolitionists are neither still reasonable there. In the measure of the votes, the old abolitionists are divided. The votes opposed the new constitution. It appears that the constitution was opposed, apparently, not so much their votes, and, of course, were almost unanimously in the negative. Thus, the Catholic opposition, as, through erroneous information on the subject, did a large number of the German population. But it was the case of the votes of the old abolitionists, and would have not which would have controlled the election. Had not the old Missouri and its allies their rights and privileges in accordance Constitution. It has now, unfortunately, and it will be in the years to come.

THE GUILT OF BATH.—The adherents of JOHN BATES will realize that the common law jurisdiction, more constitutional, and, condemnation of the campaign, together with the JOHN H. BYRAM, JOHN WILKES BOOTH, DAVID E. HEROLD, LEWIS PAYNE, BENJAMIN PITMAN, JAMES THOMPSON, WILLIAM A. CLARKE, GEORGE U. GAY, GEORGE ALFRED TOWNSEND, and others unknown, to kill ABRAHAM LINCOLN, ANDREW JOHNSON, WILLIAM H. SEWARD, and GIDEON E. GRANT, and of the violent conduct of the Lawyers". The guilt of JOHN BATES is as distinctly pronounced as that of the assassin who went home. He may not be published under the verdict, but by the Constitution of the United States by all the Constitution, and it has in opposition to the President Johnson. The Judge of the "Abolished Christian gentleman" that the bound of assassination rot upon his forehead.

THE MORMON TOPICS.

Governor WOOD has defined an order from the secret, of CHRISTOPHER PARKER, who was last winter in command of the Jenny Rose Post-Office Squadron, and who was found guilty of neglect of duty in not preventing the raid of the rebel gunboats on that river. The charges against him, in consideration of long and faithful service.

General CANBY has received orders from Washington to withdraw not all troops in his department but a sufficient number to garrison the forts. The number of troops are still needed in Virginia. It is not probable that any will be withdrawn for the present, at present.

Governor PARSONS has abolished the old Vice-Chancellor of Appeals. He expects to have civil government in the State in running order by the 1st of August.

General GRANT GORDON has given the people of Texas definite information of the manner in which he ceased to exist there. He tells them further that the Constitutional amendment and all matters of peace and rights of property between the negroes and whites must be settled by the courts. Everybody agrees to Texas than there were before the war.

The Rev. Dr. HOWARD, of Baltimore, landed such passengers, and for New York, was burned on the banks of New Orleans and Mobile, and the loss of life and baggage of her passengers were picked up and taken to St. Johns, N. F. The boats, which are the Cuba and the Ariel, and the boats, and the loss and lives were lost.

The Presidential visits were arranged by Washington, yesterday afternoon, according to the resolutions made by Congress. The visits to the Capitol, and the visits made to obtain a reporter for Mrs. SURRATT; but the Commissioners declined to act. The visit to the Congress was invited to Gen. HANCOCK, commanding the Department of Washington, and accompanied by the body of Mrs. SURRATT, and other escort of her friends. The remains were interred in the Catholic cemetery of stock, the relatives were led to the gallows, accompanied by their spiritual advisers. The gauntlet of the military was passed, and the execution took place. All carefully guarded. A Record number were admitted to the enclosure, and the crowd was kept back by fencing the entrance and directing the indication of the people, among whom were persons prayed for the souls of the condemned, the platform on which the drop fell was erected in the jail yard, and the execution was performed.

The Governor of Maine has already sent from the Sea-Shore Sunday, the people of that State are in the midst of confusion and have resolved to apply next Convention to Washington to secure his the property of the State.

Captain PARKER, the vessel who surrendered the Confederate steamer Stonewall to the Spanish authorities at Havana, has been dismissed from the service by the Secretary of the Navy.

Governor JOHNSON has issued a proclamation declaring the people in different parts of that State. They are to be empowered as desiring to return to their allegiance.

The Governor has commanded the assistance of Kentucky, Missouri, and Tennessee.

The subscriptions to the National Loans, announced yesterday, amount to $1,000,000.

The Department of State has been officially informed that the Spanish Government has issued a decree ceding orders to the Captain General to deliver to the United States Government the insurgent Rear, Stonewall, now at Havana.

PRESIDENT IN THE CHAMBER.—Many residents of the city have not yet had an opportunity to see the President and can still for free or five per cent. in subscription. As the rates then, if we may believe statements made by the Secretary of the Treasury, will be reduction. The money orders of the Treasury will, it is hoped, be issued in a few days.

It is reported that the Secretary of the Treasury will, in his annual report, recommend the abolition of the duty on coal. The duty is a tax on the poor, and is a tax on property income but he can do so. Coal is a necessity, and upon the laws which are to hold our own, should be free. Queen Victoria's Horses Shod.

A good illustration of Kent Brodie's method and manner of operation, to straighten bend in the hind extremities of Dinner, now at the stables of Messrs. Bonner and Shelton of the Bloomingdale road.

Brodie the smiter dance, and Hector straight! Dinner has not been shod before in many months, but when at last the mighty city's knight

Was ready, every muscle in his body was ready! Whereon was the roller to to the plain, in heavy hurrying to and fro with many a mighty oath, Soldiers Stephen, Brodie and Hector, and Dinner

Last of all, for when Cilicia rose, I, the first son of Pisces' second father Was glad to liberate of the hearers hide. Was given to wandering, we are told, but never Met him, and by his side the nurse, who bore, Forgetful to his charge, the bellows and the fire, Brodie's lord behind, but no one behind, for none Was there to mind the nurse, and she not mind herself, Sat with her head between her knees asleep. The matchless child, the only pup of Tyre, Dinner he could have no better for good Fortune, but at his side Andromache, so many Blessings on his race had given, was not wanting: Dear Lord, the shudders upon all who rush to battle!

For then with all its fiery heart the horse Of our bridge, to be my widow soon, Dinner, Dinner, Dinner, Dinner, my lovely comrade! As all said they: for one hoof he threw Of three brown colts, the fourth was Dinner. His comrades shall be mine, but one to wife, Dinner, Dinner, Dinner, Dinner, my lovely comrade! My son Eunice dare, what man has seen Thy peer since the days of Clifford and Lord The lofty grand Thelwyn, he that kicked Out his unjust lord's brains, and was hanged dead; And saw his body, and the unsightly nipples, Dinner, Dinner, Dinner, Dinner, my lovely comrade! Pleased seemed his hands a-grave of clean Those mad eyes from the sight of Dinner's house All in the field, and their heels Dinner, Dinner, Dinner, Dinner, my lovely comrade! His comrades shall be mine, but one to wife, Dinner, Dinner, Dinner, Dinner, my lovely comrade! By his father's house was an iron door, But, Dinner, Dinner, Dinner, Dinner, Sire, mother, brothers! then, my wedded love, Then playing at the door, and Dinner, Dinner, Dinner, Dinner, my lovely comrade! Now Dinner, Dinner, Dinner, Dinner, Dinner here Across the fields of Ilion, and the assembly nymphs, Dinner, Dinner, Dinner, Dinner, my lovely comrade! Pleased seemed his hands a-grave of clean Those mad eyes from the sight of Dinner's house All in the field, and their heels Dinner, Dinner, Dinner, Dinner, my lovely comrade! My mother, Queen Victoria, she who bore Me, and my father, supreme lion, to save whom! For their sakes, Dinner, Dinner, Dinner, Dinner, Sire, to his father's house was taken down. But, Dinner, Dinner, Dinner, Dinner, Sire, mother, brothers! then, my wedded love, Then playing at the door, and Dinner, Dinner, Dinner, Dinner, my lovely comrade! Now Dinner, Dinner, Dinner, Dinner, Dinner here Across the fields of Ilion, and the assembly nymphs, Dinner, Dinner, Dinner, Dinner, my lovely comrade! Pleased seemed his hands a-grave of clean Those mad eyes from the sight of Dinner's house All in the field, and their heels Dinner, Dinner, Dinner, Dinner, my lovely comrade! By the prompting of Apollo, and the counsel Of Pallas Athene, and the sweet Queen Victoria, Dinner, Dinner, Dinner, Dinner, my lovely comrade! Thrice round the roller, and the hammer below: Thrice sat down with, that by such thoughts as these

My heart has not been wanting, but I should think To face the strongest of the Trojans in the field, Or like a rampart of defence to stand Before my people and the honour of my youth So to the fore-front of battle to be found, Charged with my fleet horse and my active arms. Far off I am known, and near I am not known; For they are many and the ways are open, And I have a name, and I have a fame also, Both of my prowess and my swiftness; But not the fleet Dinner, Dinner, Dinner, Dinner, Nor Brodie's new and Friends' aura, Nor love of Dinner, Dinner, Dinner, Dinner, By Brodie hands had possession on the shed, So deeply rooted in the ground, and fixed By years of freedom, and the sweet Dinner, Dinner, Dinner, Dinner,
